Making This Dictionary Your Primary Kindle Dictionary

To use this dictionary to look up words while reading on your Amazon Kindle, you need to change the default setting. You can do this by taking the following steps:

1. Press the HOME key.
2. Press MENU, then select “Settings”.
3. Press MENU again, then select “Change Primary Dictionary”.
4. Select “Merriam-Webster’s Dictionary and Thesaurus” from the list.

When you are reading an ebook and move the cursor in front of a word you want to look up, your Kindle will then be able to look it up in Merriam-Webster’s Dictionary and Thesaurus.

The above instructions are accurate as of the time of publication. Please see the documentation for your Kindle model if the above steps do not work.

Note on Order of Entries in Kindle’s Search Dictionary Box: When looking up a word by typing in the Kindle's "Search dictionary" box, the list of words that appears is alphabetized somewhat differently than the dictionary itself. For example, entries beginning with an Arabic numeral are grouped together prior to the letter A; if you type the number “1”, you will be able to browse this group of entries.
Preface

Merriam-Webster's Dictionary and Thesaurus marks the introduction of a new kind of product from Merriam-Webster, one that combines the features of a dictionary, with its meanings, pronunciations, and grammatical information, with the synonym and antonym features of a thesaurus. Additionally, in this volume, these features are not just combined but integrated into a unified whole, so that the reader and writer can easily see the relationships between the two kinds of information.

The dictionary entries themselves are based on the highly popular The Merriam-Webster Dictionary and on Merriam-Webster's Collegiate Dictionary. The thesaurus entries are drawn from Merriam-Webster's newest and most up-to-date thesaurus. The dictionary entries and thesaurus entries have been edited so as to ensure correspondence between the indicated dictionary senses and the selection of similar and contrasting words offered in the thesaurus lists.

The more than 57,000 boldface dictionary entries give coverage to the most frequently used words in the language, and the definitions have been based on examples of actual use found in the Merriam-Webster citation files, which now contain more than 75 million words available through electronic searching.

The thesaurus lists offer a total of more than 134,000 alternative words for the writer interested in finding a more appropriate or more colorful word choice. Thesaurus lists appear indented following their dictionary entries. Every dictionary sense that has a corresponding thesaurus list is marked with a black arrowhead, and the thesaurus list is likewise indicated.

When there are multiple dictionary senses highlighted, the thesaurus lists are marked with the appropriate dictionary sense numbers in square brackets to make it easy for the user to choose the corresponding list of synonyms.

abide /əˈbīd/ verb abode /ˈbōd/ or abid·ed; abid·ing
1 ▶: to bear patiently: ENDURE
2 a ▶: to continue in a state or place
   b ▶: to have one's abode
   — abide by
      : to conform or acquiesce to <abide by the law>

Synonyms
   ▶ [1] bear, brook, countenance, endure, meet, stand, stick out, stomach, support, sustain, take, tolerate—more at BEAR
   ▶ [2a] continue, endure, hold, keep up, last, persist, run on—more at CONTINUE
   ▶ [2b] dwell, live, reside—more at LIVE

A word in the synonym list following an italic also is still comparable to the dictionary word in the indicated sense, but has a somewhat less close relationship than words ahead of it. Semicolons separate additional words into related groups.

cloak /klōk/ noun
1 : a loose outer garment
2 ▶: something that conceals

Synonyms
   ▶ curtain, hood, mantle, mask, shroud, veil; also cover, screen, shield; facade, face, veneer

Thesaurus entries all show synonyms, and some lists also have common contrasting words (antonyms), which are introduced by a bold italic Antonyms.

fer·tile /fərˈtil/ adjective
1 ▶: producing plentifully: PRODUCTIVE << soils > << a ~ mind>
2 : capable of developing or reproducing << seed > << a ~ bull>
   — fer·til·i·ty /fərˈtilə-tē/ noun

Synonyms
   ▶ fecund, fruitful, luxuriant, productive, prolific, rich; also bearing, producing, yielding; abounding, abundant, bountiful; copious, plenteous, plentiful; blooming, bursting, swarming, teeming, thriving; creative, inventive, original Antonyms
barren, infertile, sterile, unfruitful, unproductive

Since thesaurus information is relatively self-explanatory and there are numerous distinctive, and sometimes subtle, features of the dictionary, the focus of the following section, Using the Dictionary, is on the dictionary features.

While this work has been years in the making, drawing on the work and experience of the Merriam-Webster staff of professional lexicographers, we wish to thank those who have worked hard to produce this volume. Primary editors were Mary W. Cornog, Amy K. Harris Van Vranken, and Amy West. Additional editing was done by Jocelyn W. Franklin with Cynthia S. Ashby and James G. Lowe. Daniel B. Brandon, Jennifer N. Cislo, Ilya A. Davidovich, Mary M. Dunn, and E. Louise Langford provided further editorial contributions. This work was conceived by John M. Morse; Robert D. Copeland was general editor.

It was more than 150 years ago that Merriam-Webster published its first dictionary, and it has been 30 years since the company published its first thesaurus. In that time, Merriam-Webster's reputation as the premier American publisher of dictionaries, thesauruses, and other reference books has grown. This work continues the proud tradition of excellence.
Using the Dictionary
ENTRIES

A boldface letter or a combination of such letters, including punctuation marks and diacritics where needed, that is set flush with the left-hand margin is a main entry. The main entry may consist of letters set solid, of letters joined by a hyphen or a diagonal, or of letters separated by one or more spaces:

- alone ... adjective
- avant-garde ... noun
- and/or ... conjunction
- assembly language ... noun

The material in lightface type that follows each main entry on the same line and on succeeding lines presents information about the main entry.

The main entries follow one another in alphabetical order letter by letter: bill of attainder follows billion; Day of Atonement follows daylight saving time. Main entries containing an Arabic numeral are alphabetized as if the numeral were spelled out: 4-H comes between fourfold and Four Hundred; 3-D comes between three and three-dimensional. Those that often begin with the abbreviation St. in common usage have the abbreviation spelled out: Saint Valentine’s Day. Main entries that begin with Mc are alphabetized just as they are spelled.

When one main entry has exactly the same written form as another, the two are distinguished by superscript numerals preceding each word:

1melt ... verb
2melt noun
1pine ... noun
2pine verb

Full words come before parts of words made up of the same letters; solid compounds come before hyphenated compounds; hyphenated compounds come before open compounds; and lowercase entries come before those with an initial capital:

2super ... adjective
super- ... prefix
run-down ... noun
run-down ... adjective
run down verb
dutch ... adverb
Dutch ... noun

The centered dots within entry words indicate division points at which a hyphen may be put at the end of a line of print or writing. Thus the noun cap-puc-ci-no may be ended on one line and continued on the next in this manner:

cappuccino cappuc-cino cappuccino

Centered dots are not shown after a single initial letter or before a single terminal letter because typesetters seldom cut off a single letter:

abyss ... noun
flitty ... adjective idea ... noun

Nor are they usually shown at the second and succeeding homographs unless they differ among themselves:

1sig-nal ... noun
2signal verb
3signal adjective
1min-ute ... noun
2mi-nute ... adjective

There are acceptable alternative end-of-line divisions just as there are acceptable variant spellings and pronunciations, but no more than one division is shown for any entry in this dictionary.

When a main entry is followed by the word or and another spelling, the two spellings are equal variants. Both are standard, and either one may be used according to personal inclination:

\textit{ocher or ochre}

If two variants joined by or are out of alphabetical order, they remain equal variants. The one printed first is, however, slightly more common than the second:

\textbf{1plow or plough}

When another spelling is joined to the main entry by the word \textit{also}, the spelling after \textit{also} is a secondary variant and occurs less frequently than the first:

\textit{absinthe also absinth}

Secondary variants belong to standard usage and may be used according to personal inclination. Once the word \textit{also} is used to signal a secondary variant, all following variants are joined by or:

\textbf{2wool-ly also wool-ie or wooly}

Variants having a usage label appear only at their own alphabetical places:

\textit{gage var of GAUGE}

\textbf{1gauge also gage}

Variants whose spelling puts them alphabetically more than a print column away from the main entry are entered at their own alphabetical places as well as at the main entry:

\textbf{2gage}

\textbf{1gauge}

When a compound is widely used and one styling predominates, that styling is shown. When a compound is uncommon or when the evidence indicates that two or three stylings are approximately equal in frequency, the styling shown is based on the comparison of other similar compounds.

A main entry may be followed by one or more derivatives or by a homograph with a different functional label. These are run-on entries. Each starts on a new line introduced by a long dash and each has a functional label. They are, however, defined, since their meanings are readily understood from the meaning of the root word:

\textit{ab-dom-en} … noun …

— \textit{ab-dom-i-nal} adjective

— \textit{ab-dom-i-nal-ly} adverb

\textit{hi-cup} … noun … hiccup verb

A main entry may be followed by one or more phrases containing the entry word or an inflected form of it. These are also run-on entries. Each starts on a new line introduced by a long dash but there is no functional label. They are, however, defined since their meanings are more than the sum of the meanings of their elements:

\textbf{1set} … verb …

— \textit{set sail} …

\textbf{1hand} … noun …

— \textit{at hand} …

Defined phrases of this sort are run on at the entry defining the first major word in the phrase. When there are variants, however, the run-on appears at the entry defining the first major word which is invariable in the phrase:

\textbf{1seed} … noun … \textit{go to seed or run to seed} …

Boldface words that appear within parentheses (as \textit{co-ca} at \textit{co-caine} and \textit{jet engine} and \textit{jet propulsion} at \textit{jet-propelled}) are run-in entries. They are essentially defined within the context of the definition.
PRONUNCIATION

The matter between a pair of slashes // following the entry word indicates the pronunciation. The symbols used are explained in the chart printed at the end of this section.

A hyphen is used in the pronunciation to show syllabic division. These hyphens sometimes coincide with the centered dots in the entry word that indicate end-of-line division:

\texttt{ab\textendash{}sen\textendash{}tee} /ˌab-sən-ˈtē/

Sometimes they do not:

\texttt{met\textendash{}ric} /ˈme-trik/

A high-set mark ˈ indicates major (primary) stress or accent; a low-set mark ˌ indicates minor (secondary) stress or accent:

\texttt{heart\textendash{}beat} /ˈhɑrt-ˌbɛt/

The stress mark stands at the beginning of the syllable that receives the stress.

A syllable with neither a high-set mark nor a low-set mark is unstressed:

\texttt{struc\textendash{}ture} /ˈstrək-chər/

The presence of variant pronunciations indicates that not all educated speakers pronounce words the same way. A second-place variant is not to be regarded as less acceptable than the pronunciation that is given first. It may, in fact, be used by as many educated speakers as the first variant, but the requirements of the printed page are such that one must precede the other:

\texttt{apri\textendash{}cot} /ˈa-prə-ˌkät, ˈā-/

\texttt{fore\textendash{}head} /ˈfȯr-əd, ˈfȯr-ˌhed/

Symbols enclosed by parentheses represent elements that are present in the pronunciation of some speakers but are absent from the pronunciation of other speakers, or elements that are present in some but absent from other utterances of the same speaker:

\texttt{om\textendash{}ni\textendash{}bus} /ˈäm-ni-(ˌ)bas/

\texttt{ad\textendash{}di\textendash{}tion\textendash{}al} /ə-ˈdi\textendash{}shə\textendash{}nal/

Thus, the above parentheses indicate that some people say /ˈäm-ni\textendash{}bus/ and others say /ˈäm-ni-bas/; some /ə\textendash{}di\textendash{}sha\textendash{}nal/, others /ə\textendash{}di\textendash{}shnæl/.

When a main entry has less than a full pronunciation, the missing part is to be supplied from a pronunciation in a preceding entry or within the same pair of reversed slashes:

\texttt{cham\textendash{}pi\textendash{}on\textendash{}ship} /ˌship/

\texttt{pa\textendash{}la\textendash{}ver} /pə\textendash{}ˈla\textendash{}var, -ˈlā-/

The pronunciation of the first three syllables of \textit{championship} is found at the main entry \textit{champion}. The hyphens before and after /ˈlā/ in the pronunciation of \textit{palaver} indicate that both the first and the last parts of the pronunciation are to be taken from the immediately preceding pronunciation.

In general, no pronunciation is indicated for open compounds consisting of two or more English words that have own-place entry:

\texttt{witch\textendash{}doctor noun}

Only the first entry in a sequence of numbered homographs is given a pronunciation if their pronunciations are the same:

\texttt{1re\textendash{}ward /ri\textendash{}ˈwȯrd/ verb}

\texttt{2reward noun}

The absent but implied pronunciation of derivatives and compounds run on after a main entry is a combination of the pronunciation at the main entry and the pronunciation of the other element as given at its alphabetical place in the vocabulary:

\texttt{— ab\textendash{}ject\textendash{}ness noun}

\texttt{— face\textendash{}off verb}

Thus, the pronunciation of \textit{abjectness} is the sum of the pronunciations given at \textit{abject} and -\textit{ness}; that of \textit{face\textendash{}off}, the sum of the pronunciations of the two elements that make up the phrase.
FUNCTIONAL LABELS

An italic label indicating a part of speech or another functional classification follows the pronunciation or, if no pronunciation is given, the main entry. The eight traditional parts of speech are indicated as follows:

- bold … adjective
- forth·with … adverb
- 1but … conjunction
- ge·sund·heit … interjection
- bo·le·ro … noun
- 2un·der … preposition
- 1it … pronoun
- 1slap … verb

Other italicized labels used to indicate functional classifications that are not traditional parts of speech include:

- AT abbreviation
- self- combining form
- un- … prefix
- -ial adjective suffix
- 2-ly adverb suffix
- 2-er … noun suffix
- -ize … verb suffix
- Fe symbol
- may … verbal auxiliary

Functional labels are sometimes combined:

- afloat … adjective or adverb
INFLECTED FORMS

Nouns

The plurals of nouns are shown in this dictionary when suffixation brings about a change of final -y to -i-, when the noun ends in a consonant plus -o or in -ey, when the noun ends in -oo, when the noun has an irregular plural or an uninflected plural or a foreign plural, when the noun is a compound that pluralizes any element but the last, when a final consonant is doubled, when the noun has variant plurals, and when it is believed that the dictionary user might have reasonable doubts about the spelling of the plural or when the plural is spelled in a way contrary to what is expected:

- spy noun, plural spies
- silo noun, plural silos
- valley noun, plural valleys
- shampoo noun, plural shampoos
- mouse noun, plural mice
- moose noun, plural moose
- cri-te-ri-on noun, plural -ria
- son-in-law noun, plural sons-in-law
- quiz noun, plural quiz-ies
- fish noun, plural fish or fishes
- pi noun, plural pis
- dry noun, plural drys

Cutback inflected forms are used when the noun has three or more syllables:

- amenity noun, plural -ties

The plurals of nouns are usually not shown when the base word is unchanged by suffixation, when the noun is a compound whose second element is readily recognizable as a regular free form entered at its own place, or when the noun is unlikely to occur in the plural:

- night noun
- forefoot noun
- monogamy noun

Nouns that are plural in form and that are regularly construed as plural are labeled noun plural:

- munchies noun plural

Nouns that are plural in form but that are not always construed as plurals are appropriately labeled:

- logistics noun singular or plural

Verbs

The principal parts of verbs are shown in this dictionary when suffixation brings about a doubling of a final consonant or an elision of a final -e or a change of final -y to -i-, when final -c changes to -ck in suffixation, when the verb ends in -ey, when the inflection is irregular, when there are variant inflected forms, and when it is believed that the dictionary user might have reasonable doubts about the spelling of an inflected form or when the inflected form is spelled in a way contrary to what is expected:

- snag verb snapped; snagging
- move verb moved; moving
- cry verb cried; crying
- frol·ic verb frol·icked; frol·ick·ing
1. survey ... verb surveyed, survey·ing
2. drive ... verb drove, driv·en, driving
2. bus verb bused, bussed, bus·ing or bus·sing
2. visa verb vi·saed, vi·sa·ing
2. chagrin verb cha·grined, cha·grin·ing

The principal parts of a regularly inflected verb are shown when it is desirable to indicate the pronunciation of one of the inflected forms:

- learn ... verb learned, learn·ing
- alter /ˈȯl-tər/ verb al·ter·ed, al·ter·ing

Cutback inflected forms are usually used when the verb has three or more syllables, when it is a two-syllable word that ends in -l and has variant spellings, and when it is a compound whose second element is readily recognized as an irregular verb:

- elim·i·nate ... verb -nat·ed, -nat·ing
- quarrel verb -reled, -rel·led, -rel·ing or -rel·ling
- re·take ... verb -took, -tak·en, -tak·ing

The principal parts of verbs are usually not shown when the base word is unchanged by suffixation or when the verb is a compound whose second element is readily recognizable as a regular free form entered at its own place:

- jump ... verb
- pre·judge ... verb

Another inflected form of English verbs is the third person singular of the present tense, which is regularly formed by the addition of -s or -es to the base form of the verb. This inflected form is not shown except at a handful of entries (as have and do) for which it is in some way unusual.

Adjectives & Adverbs

The comparative and superlative forms of adjectives and adverbs are shown in this dictionary when suffixation brings about a doubling of a final consonant or an elision of a final -e or a change of final -y to -i, when the word ends in -ey, when the inflection is irregular, and when there are variant inflected forms:

- red ... adjective red·der, red·dest
- tame ... adjective tam·er, tam·est
- kind·ly ... adjective kind·li·er, -est
- hors·ey also horsy ... adjective hors·i·er, -est
- good ... adjective bet·ter ... best
- far ... adverb far·ther ... or fur·ther ... far·thest or fur·thest

The superlative forms of adjectives and adverbs of two or more syllables are usually cut back:

- fancy adjective fan·ci·er, -est
- ear·ly ... adverb ear·li·er, -est

The comparative and superlative forms of regularly inflected adjectives and adverbs are shown when it is desirable to indicate the pronunciation of the inflected forms:

- young /ˈyəŋ/ adjective youn·ger /-gər, youn·gest /-gest

The inclusion of inflected forms in -er and -est at adjective and adverb entries means nothing more about the use of more and most with these adjectives and adverbs than that their comparative and superlative degrees may be expressed in either way: lazier or more lazy, laziest or most lazy.

At a few adjective entries only the superlative form is shown:

- mere adjective, superlative mer·est

The absence of the comparative form indicates that there is no evidence of its use.

The comparative and superlative forms of adjectives and adverbs are usually not shown when the base word is unchanged by suffixion, when the inflected forms of the word are identical with those of a preceding homograph, or when the word is a compound whose second element is readily recognizable as a regular free form entered at its own place:

- near adverb
- good adverb
un·wor·thy ... adjective
Inflected forms are not shown at undefined run-ons.
CAPITALIZATION

Most entries in this dictionary begin with a lowercase letter. A few of these have an italicized label often cap, which indicates that the word is as likely to be capitalized as not and that it is as acceptable with an uppercase initial as it is with one in lowercase. Some entries begin with an uppercase letter, which indicates that the word is usually capitalized. The absence of an initial capital or of an often cap label indicates that the word is not ordinarily capitalized:

- salm•on  ... noun
- gar•gan•tuan  ... adjective, often cap
- Mo•hawk  ... noun

The capitalization of entries that are open or hyphenated compounds is similarly indicated by the form of the entry or by an italicized label:

- french fry  noun, often cap 1st F
- un–Amer•i•can  adjective
- Par•kin•son’s disease  ... noun
- lazy Su•san  ... noun

A word that is capitalized in some senses and lowercase in others shows variations from the form of the main entry by the use of italicized labels at the appropriate senses:

- Trin•i•ty  ... noun ... 2 not cap
- To•ry  ... noun ... 3 often not cap
- ti•tan  ... noun 1 cap
- re•nais•sance  ... noun ... 1 cap ... 2 often cap
ETYMOLOGY

This dictionary gives the etymologies for a number of the vocabulary entries. These etymologies are in boldface square brackets preceding the definition, and are introduced by the word ORIGIN in small capitals. Meanings given in roman type within these brackets are not definitions of the entry, but are meanings of the Middle English, Old English, or non-English words within the brackets.

The etymology gives the language from which words borrowed into English have come. It also gives the form of the word in that language or a representation of the word in our alphabet if the form in that language differs from that in English:

- philodendron ...
  [ORIGIN: NL, fr. Gk, neut. of philodendros loving trees ... ]

- savage ...
  [ORIGIN: ME sauvage, fr. MF, fr. ML salvaticus, alter. of L silvaticus of the woods, wild ... ]

An etymology beginning with the name of a language (including ME or OE) and not giving the foreign (or Middle English or Old English) form indicates that this form is the same as the form of the entry word:

- legume ...
  [ORIGIN: F]

- journey ...
  [ORIGIN: ME, fr. OF ... ]

An etymology beginning with the name of a language (including ME or OE) and not giving the foreign (or Middle English or Old English) meaning indicates that this meaning is the same as the meaning expressed in the first definition in the entry:

- ugly ... adjective ...
  [ORIGIN: ME, fr. ON uggli ... ] 1 FRIGHTFUL, DIRE
Three types of status labels are used in this dictionary—temporal, regional, and stylistic—to signal that a word or a sense of a word is not part of the standard vocabulary of English.

The temporal label obsolete means that there is no evidence of use since 1755:

1post noun 1 obsolete

The label obsolete is a comment on the word being defined. When a thing, as distinguished from the word used to designate it, is obsolete, appropriate orientation is usually given in the definition:

cat-a·pult ... noun 1: an ancient military machine for hurling missiles

The temporal label archaic means that a word or sense once in common use is found today only sporadically or in special contexts:

1mete ... verb ... 1 archaic
1thou ... pronoun, archaic

A word or sense limited in use to a specific region of the U.S. has an appropriate label. The adverb chiefly precedes a label when the word has some currency outside the specified region, and a double label is used to indicate considerable currency in each of two specific regions:

2wash noun 5 West

do·gie ... noun, chiefly West

cru·l·ler ... noun ... 2 Northern & Midland

Words current in all regions of the U.S. have no label.

A word or sense limited in use to one of the other countries of the English-speaking world has an appropriate regional label:

chem·ist ... noun ... 2 British loch ... noun, Scottish wireless noun ... 2 chiefly British

The label dialect indicates that the pattern of use of a word or sense is too complex for summary labeling: it usually includes several regional varieties of American English or of American and British English:

2mind verb 1 chiefly dialect

The stylistic label slang is used with words or senses that are especially appropriate in contexts of extreme informality:

3can ... verb ... 2 slang

There is no satisfactory objective test for slang, especially with reference to a word out of context. No word, in fact, is invariably slang, and many standard words can be given slang applications.

The stylistic labels offensive and disparaging are used for those words or senses that in common use are intended to hurt or that are likely to give offense even when they are used without such an intent:

dumb ... adjective 1 often offensive half-breed ... noun, often disparaging

Definitions are sometimes followed by verbal illustrations that show a typical use of the word in context. These illustrations are enclosed in angle brackets, and the word being illustrated is usually replaced by a lightface swung dash. The swung dash stands for the boldface entry word, and it may be followed by an italicized suffix:

jump ... verb ... 5 (~ the gun)
all-around ... adjective 1 ... (best ~ performance) can·on ... noun ... 3 ... (the ~s of good taste)
en·joy ... verb ... 2 ... (~ed the concert)

The swung dash is not used when the form of the boldface entry word is changed in suffixation, and it is not used for compounds:

Definitions are sometimes followed by usage notes that give supplementary information about such matters as idiom, syntax, and semantic relationship. A usage note is introduced by a lightface dash:

cry noun ... 5 ... —usu. used in the phrase a far cry jaw ... noun ... 2 ... — usu. used in pl.
ada·gio ... adverb or adj ... — used as a direction in music
hajji … noun … — often used as a title

Sometimes a usage note is used in place of a definition. Some function words (as conjunctions and prepositions) have chiefly grammatical meaning and little or no lexical meaning; most interjections express feelings but are otherwise untranslatable into lexical meaning; and some other words (as honorific titles) are more amenable to comment than to definition:

or … conjunction — used as a function word to indicate an alternative

1 at … preposition 1 — used to indicate a point in time or space

auf Wie·der·seh·en … interjection … — used to express farewell

sir … noun … 2 — used as a usu. respectful form of address
SENSE DIVISION

A boldface colon is used in this dictionary to introduce a definition:

1equine … adjective …
   : of or relating to the horse

It is also used to separate two or more definitions of a single sense:

notify … verb …
   1 : to give notice of : report the occurrence of Boldface Arabic numerals separate the senses of a word that has more than one sense:

adjudge … verb …
   1 : to decide or rule upon as a judge : JUDGE, ADJUDICATE
   2 : to hold or pronounce to be : DEEM 3 : …

A particular semantic relationship between senses is sometimes suggested by the use of one of the two italic sense dividers especially or also.

The sense divider especially is used to introduce the most common meaning included in the more general preceding definition:

crystal … noun …
   2 : something resembling crystal (as in transparency); especially : a clear glass used for table articles

The sense divider also is used to introduce a meaning related to the preceding sense by an easily understood extension of that sense:

china … noun
   : porcelain ware; also : domestic pottery in general

The order of senses is historical: the sense known to have been first used in English is entered first. This is not to be taken to mean, however, that each sense of a multisense word developed from the immediately preceding sense.

It is altogether possible that sense 1 of a word has given rise to sense 2 and sense 2 to sense 3, but frequently sense 2 and sense 3 may have developed independently of one another from sense 1.

When an italicized label follows a boldface numeral, the label applies only to that specific numbered sense. It does not apply to any other boldface numbered senses:

craft … noun … 3 plural usually craft
1father … noun … 2 cap … 5 often cap

dulcimer … noun … 2 or dulci-mer /ˌdul-ˈsi-mər/
2lift noun … 5 chiefly Brit

At craft the plural label applies to sense 3 but to none of the other numbered senses. At father the cap label applies only to sense 2 and the often cap label only to sense 5. At dulcimer the variant spelling and pronunciation apply only to sense 2, and the chiefly Brit label at lift applies only to sense 5.
CROSS-REFERENCE

Four different kinds of cross-references are used in this dictionary: directional, synonymous, cognate, and inflectional. In each instance the cross-reference is readily recognized by the underlined small capitals in which it is displayed.

A cross-reference following a lightface dash and beginning with compare is a directional cross-reference. It directs the dictionary user to look elsewhere for further information:

ordinal number … noun … —compare CARDINAL NUMBER

A cross-reference following a boldface colon is a synonymous cross-reference. It may stand alone as the only definition for an entry or for a sense of an entry; it may follow an analytical definition; it may be one of two or more synonymous cross-references separated by commas:

- fact … noun … 1: DEED
- pa·per adjective … 3: existing only in theory: NOMINAL
- fill … verb … 3: FEED, SATIATE

A synonymous cross-reference indicates that an entry, a definition at the entry, or a specific sense at the entry cross-referred to can be substituted as a definition for the entry or the sense in which the cross-reference appears.

A cross-reference following an italic variant of is a cognate cross-reference:

- pick·a·back … variant of PIGGYBACK

Occasionally a cognate cross-reference has a limiting label preceding variant of as an indication that the variant is not standard American English:

- vice … chiefly British variant of VISE

A cross-reference following an italic label that identifies an entry as an inflected form (as of a noun or verb) is an inflectional cross-reference:

- calves plural of CALF
- woven past part of WEAVE

Inflectional cross-references appear only when the inflected form falls at least a column away from the entry cross-referred to.
COMBINING FORMS, PREFIXES, & SUFFIXES

An entry that begins or ends with a hyphen is a word element that forms part of an English compound:

- wise ... adverb comb form ... (slantwise)
- ex- ... prefix ... 2 ... (ex-president)
- let noun suffix 1 ... (booklet)

Combining forms, prefixes, and suffixes are entered in this dictionary for two reasons: to make understandable the meaning of many undefined run-ons and to make recognizable the meaningful elements of words that are not entered in the dictionary.
LISTS OF UNDEFINED WORDS

Many words that begin with the prefixes or combining forms anti-, in-, non-, over-, re-, self-, semi-, sub-, super-, and un- are self-explanatory combinations of the prefix or combining form and a word entered elsewhere in the dictionary, and they are listed undefined in the entry for the prefix or combining form from which they are formed.

Basic English Grammar

The essence of the English language is the sentence. A sentence is a grammatically self-contained group of words that expresses a statement, a question, a command, a wish, or an exclamation. It is composed of a subject, about which something is said, and a predicate, which expresses what is said about the subject. The subject can be a single noun, a noun phrase, such as “the strong wind,” or a noun clause, such as “what he decides is important to all of us.” The predicate can be a single verb, a verb phrase, such as “will be going,” a verb and all its modifiers, such as “will be going as soon as the bus arrives,” or a verb and its complements, such as “gave his client the bad news.”

In English, word order is important. The subject usually comes first, but not necessarily:

- An amusement park is across the river.
- Across the river is an amusement park.
- Is an amusement park across the river?

The grammar of English is concerned with the structure of these elements that make up a sentence. Every word in a sentence can be classified as a particular part of speech (noun, verb, adjective, etc.), according to its function in the sentence. The major parts of speech are briefly discussed in the following guide to basic English grammar.
THE ADJECTIVE

The adjective gives information about a noun or pronoun, such as what kind
the black cat
a joyful occasion
or which one
a first draft
that suggestion or how many ten players
few new ideas

The adjective usually precedes the noun it modifies, but some adjectives can also follow certain verbs:
the house is white (→ white house)
the speeches seemed long (→ long speeches) that chair felt comfortable (→ comfortable chair)
the tree grew tall (→ tall tree)

Positive, Comparative, and Superlative Degrees of Adjectives

The positive degree is the basic form of the adjective. It gives basic information about the noun without reference to anything else (a white house). The comparative degree relates a noun to another—as having more or less of some quality (this house is whiter than that); the superlative degree relates the noun to all others of its class (this is the whitest house in the neighborhood).

When the adjective consists of a single syllable, the suffix -er is added to form the comparative degree, and the suffix -est is added to form the superlative degree. When the adjective consists of two syllables, the suffixes are often used to form the comparative (as gentler) and superlative (as gentlest), but the adverbs more/less can also be used to form the comparative (as more skillful and less skillful), and likewise, the adverbs most/least can be used to form the superlative (as most skillful and least skillful). For adjectives of more than two syllables, the adverbs are usually used to form the comparative and superlative forms (as more fortunate, most fortunate).

There are a few adjectives that have unique comparative and superlative forms:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Positive</th>
<th>Comparative</th>
<th>Superlative</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>good</td>
<td>better</td>
<td>best</td>

<td>less</td>
<td>least</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>but</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>little (size)</td>
<td>littler</td>
<td>littlest</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

There are a few adjectives that have no comparative or superlative forms.

an utter failure
the principal objections

Demonstrative Adjectives

The demonstrative adjectives this and that are used to point out the one person or thing referred to (as “not this coat but that one”). The plural forms are these and those, respectively.

These books are mine and those books are yours.
Descriptive Adjectives

A descriptive adjective describes or indicates a quality, type, or condition:
- a fascinating conversation
- a positive attitude
- a fast computer

Indefinite Adjectives

An indefinite adjective is used to designate unspecified person(s) or thing(s):
- some children
- other projects
- any book

Interrogative Adjectives

An interrogative adjective is used to form a question:
- Whose office is this?
- Which book do you want?

The Noun Used As Adjective

A noun sometimes serves to modify another noun and thus functions as an adjective:
- the Vietnam War
- word processing

Possessive Adjectives

The possessive form of a personal pronoun is called a possessive adjective. Following is a list of possessive adjectives and a few examples of how they are used:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Singular</th>
<th>Plural</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>my</td>
<td>our</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>your</td>
<td>your</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>his/her/its</td>
<td>their</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Where's my magazine?
Your cab is here.
They can read his story.
It was her idea.
The box and its contents were inspected.
She's our mother.
Your photos are ready.
We paid for their tickets.

Predicate Adjectives

A predicate adjective modifies the subject of a linking verb, such as be, become, feel, taste, smell, or seem:

- He is lucky.
- She became angry.
- They are happy with the outcome.
- The milk smells bad.
- The student seems lonely.

Proper Adjectives

A proper adjective is derived from a proper noun and is capitalized:

- Victorian furniture
- a Chinese custom
- a Shakespearean scholar
THE ADVERB

Adverbs, whether single words or phrases, usually give information about the verbs, such as when
We arrived yesterday.
He woke up late.
or where
I found them at the restaurant.
He spent time in [the] hospital.
or how
They arose quickly.
She worked hard.

Most single-word adverbs end in -ly and are formed by adding the suffix -ly to an adjective:
mad → madly
wonderful → wonderfully

When the adjective ends in -y, the adverb is formed by changing -y to -i and adding the suffix -ly:
happy → happily
dainty → daintily

When the adjective ends in -ic, the adverb is formed by adding the suffix -ally:
basic → basically
numeric → numerically

When an adjective ends in -ly, the adverb retains the same spelling:
a daily routine (adjective)
she calls her mother daily (adverb)
an early meeting (adjective)
the show started early (adverb)

Also, there are adverbs that do not end in -ly, for example:
again
now soon too
there how

Positive, Comparative, and Superlative Degrees of Adverbs

Adverbs, like adjectives, can have three degrees of comparison: the positive form exists without reference to to anything else; the comparative degree relates to another—as being more or less of the adverb quality; and superlative relates to all members of a class. As a general rule, a single-syllable adverb ends in -er when it is comparative (as faster) and in -est when it is superlative (as fastest). For adverbs of three or more syllables, the comparative and superlative degrees are formed by using the adverbs more/less and most/least. The comparative and superlative degrees of an adverb of two syllables are formed by following either one of these methods:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Positive</th>
<th>Comparative</th>
<th>Superlative</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>early</td>
<td>earlier</td>
<td>earliest</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>easy</td>
<td>easier</td>
<td>easiest</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>nearly</td>
<td>more nearly</td>
<td>most nearly</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>quickly</td>
<td>more quickly</td>
<td>most quickly</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

unhappily less satisfactorily least satisfactorily

Some adverbs, such as only, quite, and very, have no comparative or superlative forms.
Intensive Adverbs

Intensive adverbs, such as just and only, are usually used only to emphasize other words. The emphasis varies according to the placement of the adverb within the sentence:

- He just nodded to me as he passed.
- He nodded to me just as he passed.
- I only wanted to speak with you.
- I wanted to speak only with you.

Interrogative Adverbs

Interrogative adverbs, such as when, where, and why, are used chiefly to introduce questions:

- When will he return?
- Where is the remote control?
- Why did you hide it?
Articles, sometimes called “determiners,” are elements of a noun phrase that indicate whether the noun is “definite,” that is, a specific individual, or “indefinite,” that is, very general in nature.

The Definite Article

There is only one form of the definite article: the.

The boys were expelled.

It was the best movie I have seen.

The Indefinite Article

The indefinite article a is used with every noun or abbreviation beginning with either a consonant or the sound of a consonant:

- a door
- a union
- a one-way street
- a B.A. degree
- a hat
- a U.S. Senator

The indefinite article an is used with every noun or abbreviation that begins with a vowel sound, whether or not the first letter of the noun or abbreviation is a vowel or consonant:

- an icicle
- an MP
- an honor
- an FAQ

When the first syllable of a noun beginning with h is not stressed or has only a slight stress, the article a is frequently used:

- a historian
- a heroic attempt
- a hilarious performance

However, the article an is sometimes used in these cases:

- an historian
- an heroic attempt
- an hilarious performance

Both forms are acceptable.
THE CONJUNCTION

There are three main types of conjunctions: coordinating conjunctions, correlative conjunctions, and subordinating conjunctions.

Coordinating Conjunctions

Coordinating conjunctions, such as and, but, for, or, nor, so, and yet, are used to connect grammatical elements of the same type. These elements may be words, phrases, clauses, or complete sentences. Coordinating conjunctions are used to connect similar elements, to make exclusions or contrasts, to indicate an alternative, to indicate a cause, or to specify a result:
- Connecting similar elements: She ordered pencils, pens, and erasers.
- Exclusion or contrast: He is a brilliant but arrogant man.
  - They offered a promising plan, but it had not yet been tested.
- Alternative: She can wait here or go on ahead.
- Cause: The report is useless, for its information is no longer current.
- Result: His diction is excellent, so every word is clear.

Correlative Conjunctions

Correlative conjunctions are used in groups of two to connect choices or elements of the same grammatical type:
- Both Rita and Jane attended the conference.
- Either you go or you stay.
  - He had neither looks nor wit.

Subordinating Conjunctions

Subordinating conjunctions are used to connect a subordinate clause to an independent clause. These conjunctions express cause, condition or concession, manner, intention or result, time, place, or circumstance, as well as a possibility.
- Cause: Because she learns quickly, she is doing well in her new job.
- Condition or concession: Don't call unless you are coming.
- Manner: We'll do it however you tell us.
- Intention or result: They burned all the bridges so that the enemy could not use them.
- Time: She kept the meeting to a minimum when she could.
- Place: Wherever he goes, he is welcomed with open arms.
THE NOUN

Basic Uses

The noun may be a single word or a phrase (noun phrase). The noun phrase may consist of an article and/or adjectives and/or prepositional phrases. The noun can function as subject of a sentence, object of a verb, object of a preposition, predicate nominative, complement of an object, in apposition, and in direct discourse:

Subject:
- The office was quiet.
- The house with green shutters was for sale.

Direct object of a verb:
- He locked the office.

Indirect object of a verb:
- He gave his client the papers.

Object of a preposition:
- The business was in bankruptcy.
- The file is in the office.

Predicate nominative:
- Ms. Adams is the managing partner.

Complement of an object:
- They made Ms. Adams managing partner.

In apposition:
- Ms. Adams, the managing partner, wrote that memo.

In direct discourse:
- Ms. Adams, may I present Mr. Wilson.

Nouns are often classified as to whether they are proper nouns (Eiffel Tower, White House), common nouns (tower, house), abstract nouns (honor, love), concrete nouns (desk, flower), or collective nouns (team, government).

American English typically uses a singular verb with a collective noun (the team is), while British English typically uses a plural verb (the government are).

Most nouns are neuter, showing no distinction as to whether having a masculine or feminine reference. However, a few nouns ending in -ess (as empress, hostess) are feminine in gender, and some others have a specific gender. For example: husband, wife, father, mother, brother, sister. The names of certain animals also have a specific gender, for example, bull/cow, stag/doe. When it is necessary to specify the gender of a neuter noun, the noun is usually modified with words like male, female, man, woman (a male parrot, women painters).

The Noun As Adjective

The noun has the function of an adjective when it precedes another noun:
- olive oil
- business management
- emergency room
- dog house

The Formation of the Plural

The plural of nouns is formed by adding the suffix -s to the singular noun:
- book → books
- cat → cats

When the singular noun ends in -s, -x, -z, -ch, or -sh, the suffix -es is added to the singular:
- cross → crosses
fox → foxes
witch → witches
wish → wishes

For a singular noun ending in -z, the last letter is doubled before adding the suffix -es:

buzz → buzzes
quiz → quizzes

For a singular noun ending in -y preceded by a consonant, the -y changes to -i and the suffix -es is added:

fairy → fairies
pony → ponies
guppy → guppies

For a singular noun ending in -y preceded by a vowel, the -y usually does not change when the suffix -s is added:

boy → boys
attorney → attorneys

guy → guys
soloquy → soloquies

There are a few nouns that do not always change in the plural:

fish → fish (or fishes when referring to more than one species)
caribou → caribou (sometimes caribous)
moose → moose

There are also some nouns that have a unique plural:

foot → feet
mouse → mice
knife → knives

The Possessive Case

The possessive case of a singular noun is formed by adding an apostrophe followed by an -s:

Jackie's passport
This hat is Billy's

For plural nouns ending in -s, only the apostrophe is added:

the neighbors' dog
both boys' behavior

Proper nouns that end in -s often present a special case:

Mr. Douglas's car
Socrates' teachings
THE PREPOSITION

The preposition is used with an object (a noun, pronoun, or the equivalent of a noun) to form a phrase that functions generally as an adjective or an adverb.

The man in the car is his father. (adjective)
The river winds through the valley. (adverb)

There are two types of prepositions: the simple preposition, which consists of a single word (for example, against, from, near, of, on, out, in) and the compound preposition, which consists of more than one element (for example, according to, on account of, because of, in spite of).

The Conjunction vs. the Preposition

The words after, before, but, for, and since can be used as prepositions or conjunctions. Their part of speech is determined by their function in the sentence. Conjunctions are usually used to connect two elements of the same grammatical type, while prepositions are followed by an object to form a phrase.

Conjunction: The playful but thoughtful youngsters did well in school.
(but connects two adjectives)
Preposition: I was left with nothing but hope.
(but followed by an object)
Conjunction: The device conserves fuel, for it is battery-powered.
(for connects two clauses)
Preposition: The device conserves fuel for better mileage.
(for followed by an object)

Place in the Sentence

A preposition comes in front of a noun or a pronoun (under the desk, beside them), after an adjective (antagonistic to, insufficient for, symbolic of), or after a verb as a particle (take over, put on, come across).

The preposition may end a sentence, especially if it is a verb particle.
What does this all add up to?
After Amy left, Sandra took over.
THE PRONOUN

Pronouns are often said to stand in place of the noun or noun phrase in a sentence. Usually, the pronoun stands for something previously specified or generally understood.

Pronouns have the following characteristics: case (nominative, possessive, or objective); number (singular or plural); person (first, second, or third); and gender (masculine, feminine, or neuter). Pronouns can be classed in seven main categories, each having a specific function.

Demonstrative Pronouns

The words this, that, these, and those are considered as pronouns when they function as nouns. (They are classed as demonstrative adjectives when they modify a noun.) The demonstrative pronoun distinguishes a person or thing from another person or thing:

- This is the one I want.
- I was happy about that.
- These are the best designs.
- I picked those as the prettiest flowers.

The demonstrative pronoun also serves to distinguish a person or thing nearby from one that is farther away (this is my desk; that is yours).

Indefinite Pronouns

Indefinite pronouns are used to designate a person or thing of which the identity is unknown or is not immediately evident. The indefinite pronouns include the following:

- all
- another
- any
- anybody
- anyone
- anything
- both
- each
- each one
- either
- everybody
- everyone
- everything
- few
- many
- much
- neither
- nobody
- none
- no one
- one
- other(s)
- several
- some
The indefinite pronoun and the verb that follows it should agree in number. The following pronouns are used with a singular verb: another, anything, each one, everything, much, nobody, no one, other, someone, something:

- Much is being done.
- No one wants to go.

The indefinite pronouns both, few, many, and several are used with plural verbs:

- Many are called; few are chosen.

Certain pronouns, such as all, any, none, and some, sometimes present difficulties, since they can be used with a singular or a plural verb. As a general rule, a pronoun that is used with a noun that cannot be counted requires a singular verb, while a pronoun that is used with a noun that can be counted requires a plural verb.

With an uncountable noun: All of the property is affected.

- None of the soup was spilled.
- Some of the money was spent.

With a countable noun: All of my shoes are black.

- None of the clerks were available.
- Some of your friends were here.

Interrogative Pronouns

The interrogative pronouns what, which, who, whom, and whose, as well as those bound with the word -ever (whatever, whichever, etc.) are used to introduce a direct or an indirect question:

- Who is she?
- He asked me who she was.
- Whoever can that be?
- We wondered whoever that could be.

Personal Pronouns

The personal pronoun reflects the person, number, and gender of the being or the thing it represents. Each category is made up of distinct personal pronouns:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Person</th>
<th>Nominative</th>
<th>Possessive</th>
<th>Objective</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>First (sing.)</td>
<td>I</td>
<td>my, mine</td>
<td>me</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>(pl.)</td>
<td>we</td>
<td>our, ours</td>
<td>us</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Second (sing.)</td>
<td>you</td>
<td>your, yours</td>
<td>you</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>(pl.)</td>
<td>you</td>
<td>your, yours</td>
<td>you</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Third (sing.)</td>
<td>he</td>
<td>his</td>
<td>him</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>she</td>
<td>her, hers</td>
<td>her</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>it</td>
<td>its</td>
<td>it</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>(pl.)</td>
<td>they</td>
<td>their, theirs</td>
<td>theirs</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Reciprocal Pronouns

The reciprocal pronouns each other and one another indicate a mutual action or relationship:
Jim and Andy saw each other at the party.
They do not quarrel with one another.
The reciprocal pronoun is also used as a possessive:
The two companies depend on each other’s success.
The members enjoyed one another’s company.

Reflexive Pronouns

Reflexive pronouns are formed from the personal pronouns him, her, it, my, our, them, and your, to which the combining form -self or -selves is added. The reflexive pronoun is usually used to express a reflexive action or to emphasize the subject of a sentence, clause, or phrase:

She dressed herself.
He asked himself if it was worth it.
I myself am not involved.
They wanted to do it themselves.

Relative Pronouns

The relative pronouns are who, whom, whose, what, which, and that, as well as the compounds formed by adding the ending -ever. These pronouns are used to introduce subordinate clauses that function as a noun or an adjective.

a man who sought success
a woman whom we can trust
an author whose first novel was a success
a move which was unforeseen a boy that behaves well give it to whomever you wish whoever thought of it
pick whichever you want

In certain cases the relative pronoun may be omitted:
The man whom I was talking to is the senator.
THE VERB

Verbs have essentially three classes: ordinary verbs of action, such as go, auxiliary verbs, like can and shall, and fundamental verbs like be, have, and do, which can function as both ordinary verbs and as auxiliaries.

The verb has the following characteristics: inflection (for example, helps, helping, helped), person (first, second, third), number (singular, plural), tense (present, past, future), aspect (categories of time other than the simple tenses of present, past, future), voice (active, passive), and mood (indicative, subjunctive, and imperative).

Inflection

Regular verbs have three inflections that are formed by adding the suffixes -s or -es, -ed, and -ing (for example, asks, asked, asking). Most of the irregular verbs have four inflections (for example, sees, saw, seen, seeing). The verb be has seven inflections: is, am, are, was, were, being, been).

Verbs ending in silent -e in general keep the -e when a consonantal suffix (such as -s) is added to the word, but the -e is dropped when the suffix begins with a vowel (such as -ed, -ing):

- arrange; arranges; arranged; arranging
- hope; hopes; hoped; hoping

However, certain verbs keep the -e in order to avoid confusion with another verb:

- dye (color); dyes; dyed; dyeing
  - but
- die (cease to live); dies; died; dying
- singe (burn); singes; singed; singeing
  - but
- sing (produce music); sings; sang; singing

If a single-syllable verb ends in a single consonant preceded by a single vowel, the final consonant is often doubled before the addition of -ed or -ing:

- brag; brags; bragged; bragging
- grip; grips; gripped; gripping

When a multi-syllable verb ends in the same way, and the last syllable is stressed, the final consonant is also doubled:

- commit; commits; committed; committing
- occur; occurs; occurred; occurring

It frequently happens that a verb ending in -y preceded by a consonant changes -y to -i, except when the suffix is -ing:

- carry; carries; carried; carrying
- study; studies; studied; studying

When a verb ends in -c, a -k is added to inflections if the suffix begins with -e or -i:

- mimic; mimics; mimicked; mimicking
- traffic; traffics; trafficked; trafficking

Tense and Aspect

The present and past tenses are generally formed as a single word:

- I do, I did
- we write, we wrote

The future tense is conjugated with the auxiliary verbs shall or will and the present or progressive forms:

- I shall do it.
- We will come tomorrow.
I shall be leaving tomorrow.

Aspect concerns the tense of the verb other than the present, the past, or the future. Aspect has four forms: the progressive, the present perfect, the past perfect, and the future perfect.

The progressive is used to express an ongoing action that takes place in the present, past, or future:

He is reading the paper at the moment.

I was studying for the test when you called.

I will be going to India next year.

The present perfect tense is used to express an action done in the past but which may be continuing in the present, or to express an action that occurred at an indefinite moment in the past. It is conjugated with the auxiliary verbs has or have and the past participle:

She has written many books.

They have regretted their mistake.

The past perfect expresses a completed action that occurred before another action in the past. It is conjugated with the auxiliary verb had and the past participle:

She had written several books previously.

We had left the house before they arrived.

The future perfect tense indicates that a future action will take place before another action or occurrence still to come. It is conjugated with the auxiliary verbs will or shall and have and the past participle:

We will have finished the project by then.

They will have gone before we will arrive.

Voice

The active voice indicates that the subject of the sentence is the doer of the action of the verb; the passive voice, consisting of a form of the verb be and a past participle, indicates that the subject of the sentence is the object of the action:

Active voice: His colleagues respect him.

Passive voice: He was respected by his colleagues.

Mood

There are three moods: the indicative, the subjunctive, and the imperative. The indicative is used to indicate a fact or to ask a question:

He is here.

Is he here?

The subjunctive is used to express a condition contrary to fact, especially in clauses introduced by if, and after the verb wish:

If she were there, she could answer that.

I wish he were here.

The subjunctive is also used in clauses beginning with the word that following verbs that request, demand, or recommend:

They asked that the books be returned.

She insisted that the door remain open.

The law required that he report his earnings.

The imperative is used to express a command or a demand:

Come here!

Pay attention!
